Rockdale Warns Service Cut

The City of Rockdale is threatening to cut off fire service and ambulance service to rural residents in South Milam County unless help is forthcoming from the county.

This statement was made at Thursday's Commissioners Court meeting by Earnie Moore, Rockdale city manager, who appeared for the second time requesting help with the expeses of the services.

Moore told commissioners he was instructed to make the statement by the Rockdale city council. At that council meeting, figures were presented reporing thatRockdale pays in about $140,000 in county taxes and gets back about $81,000 in county funds and services.

Moore said the county is paying $800 a year to Rockdale for fighting rural fires where the cost to the city last year was $7,889.

It was brought out at Rockdale's council meeting that Rockdale's uncollected ambulance fees for out-of-town service in 1974 and part of 1975 totaled $5,300.

Moore said Rockdale is not asking the county to take over the ambulance service, only to help out. He said "we offer you the best deal you can get."

County Judge O. B. Harden said the county's only revenue is from taxes and fees and that the county has operated on the same levy since Depression days, not raising taxes. He said extra funds are kept for calls such as purchasing right-of-ways for road improvements.

Harden said he does not know what the answer to Rockdale's problem is. He said that the two funeral homes in Cameron want to get out of the ambulance business, too.

Harden told Moore that cities and precincts can borrow money on FHA bonds for such as ambulance and fire services.

Harden said when the county starts putting new values on land, houses, and industry, "we will discourage industry." He said the county doesn't have enough money to do everything that is needed.

In other business, commissoners awarded bid to Audis Lovelady for purchase of a collapsed tank car for $1.75 per cwt. They also agreed to study a request by the Bar-l-Bar place at Milano for staying open later on the weekend.

Commissioners also heard an information presentation by Pat Taylor and Dr. Steven Schnee on services offered by the CentralCounties Center for Mental Health-Mental Retardation Services.

Dr. Schnee said the services cover a six-county area, including Milam. Services include emergency care, out-patient care, partial hospitalization, in-patient care, residential care, and consultation-education.

He noted an increasing demand for services with up to 230 admissions a month.

Book Shower Rains Down

The shower of old law books, ledgers, and legal documents that rained down from a third floor window of the county courthouse at Lampasas caused quite a stir among those who gathered a safe distance to watch. Members of the Historical Society were quickly on the scene, but the county judge said the collection had already been scanned by state archivists.

Mid-Continent Lists Milam Oil Production

Milam County,which has had recorded production since 1921, last year produced 162,946 barrels of oil at the rate of 446 barrels per day. Production in 1974 boosted Milam County's production total through the end of the year to 6,782,170 barrles, according to the Texas Mid-Continenet Oil and Gas Association.

In 1974, some 31 counties produced more than 10 million barrels of crude oil, with Anderson and Kleberg counties dropping below that mark and off the list compiled last year. Scurry County, with 94.2 million barrels, leads the list of producing counties.

Another 12 months of crude oil production at 100 percent of the maximum effective recovery rate in nearly all Texas fields has resulted in second consecutive dropoff in crude oil production in the nation's No. 1 energy state.

An output of less than 1.3-billion barrels of crude in 1974 was almost 32.5 million barrels below the 1973 figure and over 38.7 million barrels short of Texas's all-time record production year of 1972.

Texas' production last year continued to set the pace among this nation's oil producing states, representing approximately 39.4 percent of total U.S. production, according to statistics compiled by Texas Mid-Continent Oil and Gas Association.

In 85 years, Texas' oil fields have produced over 39.1 billion barrels of crude oil, approximately 36.2 percent of total recorded U.S. production!

"The continuing and accelerating decline in production from Texas fields again points up a national crisis--an almost inevitable increase in U.S. dependence on insecure, higher-priced foreign crude oil for this country's basic energy needs," said the Association's president, Sherman Hunt, an independent Dallas oilman.

Most of the judges have been secured from out of the county, including a Temple corporation president, a professor at TJC, and a fashion coordinator from Goldsteins.

The young lady crowned queen will receive a $50 savings bond along with a trophy and gifts. All of the contestants will ride on the Folk Fete Queen Float in the parade.

Entries are still being taken and contestants should contact Mrs. Gina Woodum for details.

Restoring More Than A Ship...

The Mayaguez is due in Singapore with its complement of 39 crewmen after U. S. Marines took the ship back at Koh Tang Island off the cost of Cambodia.

Successful return of the ship ended a series of sea misadventures involving U. S. ships in recent years, starting off the cost of Chile.

The Mayaguez incident cost two American lives, 14 missing, but restored a modicum of confidence in Asiatic foreign affairs since we were unceremoniously chased off the rooftops of Saigon.

The insurgent Khmer Rouge communists misadventure in a bid for international attention while the U.S. suffered from pangs of Asiatic withdrawl. The Cambodian insurgents have no formal connections with Moscow or Peking and apparently used the Mayaguez to assert influence beyond territorial waters.

It was badly bungled. The incident allowed the U.S. to do what any nation would do in an act of piracy: reclaim the lives and property of Americans. This the Marines, Air Force, and Navy contingents did.

The excuse was the Mayaguez may have contained spy equipment, like the U.S. spy ship pulled in by North Koreans a few years ago. U. S. officials say the Mayaguez' cargo will be opened to the world to put down that specious agrument.

Misgivings in Washington arose over the Administration's immediate plan to recover the ship because the Bay of Tonkin Resolution in 1964 came after an attack on a U.S. ship off Vietnam. Former President Lyndon Johnson used Senate authority given after that incident to escalate U.S. involvement in South Vietnam into a major land and air war.

But leadership obviously had to deal with this isolated incident, timed to make a shaken major power look worse. And it appears at this reading that U.S. response was successful, timely, and confident, attributes we otherwise lacked in Vietnam.

Will Behind The Button...

The era of computers in state government is well established, but a couple of notes in Austin emphasize computer uses in decision making processes.

One computer printout became a means to convicing various legislators that a compromise education finance bill was "responsible". House Speaker Bill Clayton showed his compromise bill would have less impact on local school district taxes than other proposals.

Yet another use of the computer is the way State Comptroller Bob Bullock has accelerated distribution of city sales tax receipts to a monthly basis accounting rather than quarterly distribution.

Cries of computer abuse continue at the national level where their enormous memory banks store information unbeknownst to tens of millions of people. This use is an invasion of privacy as well as illegal in some cases. Misinformation may be all but irremediable if the person doesn't know it exists in the first place.

Whatever, computers are being employed to the advantage of people. It still depends on the will of the programmer and the people who push the buttons.

Japan's Recession Affects Traditional Labor Picture

TOKYO

Reuter--Japan's severe recession, touched off by the oil crisis of 1973, has radically altered traditional patterns of relations between management and labor.

Wage negotiations in the annual spring labor offensive--or "shuntoo" as it is called here--are now in their final stage.

But most labor unions have hit a brick wall in the shape of a 15 percent wage-rise barrier--erected by management, and backed by the government.

So far, about 12 percent of more than 3,700 unions affiliated to the major trade union organizations have reached wage settlements.

Increases average 14 to 15 percent. This compares with original demands of over 30 percent--and last year's average of 33 percent, when unions fought strongly for wage boosts to offset rampant inflation.

Things have changed now. For one thing, the government succeeded in curbing the annual inflation rate to below 15 percent by March--as it promised to do.

For another, fiscal 1974 ended in March, was Japan's first year of negative growth--about minus one percent in real terms --since the scond world war.

Unemployment in February broke through the one million barrier for the first time in eight years.

Labor experts say the radical change in economic climate at home and abroad has helped stiffen ties between management and labor, while chafing union solidarity.

A major shock to the labor movement came when the union at Kanebo LTD, a major textile producer, accepted amanagement proposal to freeze wages for one year in return for guaranteed employment and a bigger say in decision-making.

The move caused bitter criticism among unions inside and outside the textile industry.

Unions at five other major synthetic textile firm s found themselves obliged to agree to management proposals to delay basic wage increases for six months.

The 570,000 member federation of textile workers unions branded the Kanebo union a traitor, and expelled it.

But a Kanebo spokesman said the union recognized that the rapid change in economic conditions lay behind the management's wage-freeze proposal, and saw full employment and job security as the most important thing.

The textile industry has been hard hit by the business slump.

Faced with stagnant market conditions and rising competition from southeast Asian producers, textile firms have cut back production by 30 to 40 percent, and laid off tens of thousands of workers.

The federation of textile workers says that without taking into account bonusess, the average annual pay of a textile worker is now around $4,000 --above Italian levels and close to other European countries.

So much for the west's traditional view of cheap Japanese labor.

"WATCH THAT ENERGY USE, NOW"

World May Be Facing Ore Crisis

GENEVA

Reuter--After the oil crisis, an ore crisis?

It all depends, says the International Labor Organization (ILO), on the giant multinational companies which mine most of the world's ores and metals and on the developing countries which provide 40 percent of the world's exports of mining products.

"The global confrontation over natural resources must not be aggravated," says an ILO report.

The industrialized countries depend more on the third world for ores and minerals than for energy, the report added. Only the huge multinational enterprises could make the vast and risky investments needed for mining, according to the report.

But to ensure steady prices needed for development, third world states have been setting up producer cartels in ores and non-ferrous metals on the lines of the organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries (OPEC), the ILO said.

Governments seeking state control of their countries' resources had been clamping down on the big private mining companies, and producer nations had established regional groups to maintain more stringent control on foreign investment--mainly by the multinationals--the ILO reported.

In return, risk capital--with the odds against success in exploration estimated at around 10-1--appeared increasingly to be avoiding the developing countries, the report said.

The ILO assessment, presented to a 10-day technical meeting of 22 states here starting this week said developing countries were as interestd ing countries were as interested in finding a way of living with the multinational enterprises as the companies were interested in profitable operations.

"Such an understanding seems not to have been found yet," the mining experts were told. "In the last three years, 80 percent of the expenditure in mining exploration (excluding expenditure in socialist countries) was concentrated in Australia, Canada, South Africa, and the United States."

As for the cartels, the report said: "The divergent interests of the producer countries and political as well as market factors may prevent rapid or effective action in this field for some time to come."

The ILO report said that most multinational companies--incorporated primarily in the U. S., Belgium, Britain, Canada, and France--escaped the major effects of the foreign investment code of the Andean common market, which requires foreign investors to sell most of their holdings to national investors within a 15-to-20 year period.

Governments' individual action could rebound if restrictive legislation and abolition of exploration incentives made it unattractive to risk capital, the ILO report added.

A decline in exploration could then cause raw material shortages through failure to develop new mines.

"This, for instance, happened between 1971 and 1973 in Australia, Canada, and Ireland, where exploration expenditures dropped sharply." Risk capital moved to South Africa, Brazil and the Philippines."

Multinationals were coming to terms with governments "since mining companies cannot transfer their production facilities to safe havens and as a rule have to put up with the changing political climate," theILO report said.

They had also negotiated agreements with communist countries and "provided some proof that, given the opportunity, they can live with different economic systems and defy political, ideological and (up to a point) trade barriers."

But the traditional underground and open-pit systems of developing countries face potential competition from deep-sea mining before the end of this decade, the report said. Ocean mining promised cheaper production--halving the cost of copper and reducing nickel and colbalt costs by four-fifths--as well as needing a smaller capital outlay.

Zaire produced almost two thirds of the world's cobalt, the rest coming chiefly from Zambia, Cuba, and Morocco. "Any major shift in cobalt productio n to under-sea mining could have serious repercussions on their economies," the report said.

THE FAMILY LAWYER

Church Feud

Two factions of a church were locked in a bitter struggle over the powers of a controversial minister. Finally they took the issue to court for settlement.

But the judge refused to take sides. Calling attention to the constitutional separation of church and state, the judge said:

"Courts do not inquire into questions exclusively ecclesiastical. If the courts should deal with litigation of that nature, the whole subject of theology would have to be examined. Such a course would establish the courts as the final arbiter in every religious controversy."

This is the law's usual attitude toward religious disputes, declining to intrude into "things that are God's." However, the courts can and do take a hand in "things that are Caesar's."

For example, in one case a pastor had a disagreement with his church about the terms of his employment contract. A court had no hesitation in weighing the opposing arguments and in ruling (on strictly legal grounds) against the church.

Likewise, courts have dealt with such mundane matters as the ownership of church real estate or the administration of trust funds left to a church.

Furthermore, of course, churchmen are just as subject to the criminal law as any other citizen. Thus:

A minister, while denouncing sin in his sermon, described it in unusually vivid language. Outraged members of his congregation complained to the police, and the minister was duly haled into court on a charge of using obscene language in a public place.

Finding him guilty, the court commented:

"He has a right to propagate his religious views, but will not be permitted to commit a breach of the peace under the guise of preaching the gospel."

Short Trips Consume More Gas

HOUSTON

Nearly half of the fuel used by the nation's automobiles is consumed during trips of 10 miles or less, and about a third of all auto travel consists of such trips.

These are two of the major findings included in a study by the Society of Automotive Engineers (SAE).

Because short trips involve frequent stops and starts and require more travel with a fuel-robbing cold engine, gasoline consumption increases, SAE said.

QUICK QUIZ! by THOMPSON

Americans love to save time, and power lawn mowers are great time-savers. However, if you're careless they can cause accidents. Why not take this quick quiz to find out if you're playing it safe while pushing your power mower?

1. It is unsafe to cut grass while it is wet. True ( ) False ( )

2. As soon as you turn off your engine, it is safe to clean the blade. True ( ) False ( )

3. Mow steep slopes sideways with a walk-behind mower. True ( ) False ( )

4. The latest power mowers, especially the riding mowers, are powerful enough to safely chop up dead branches and other debris lying in the grass. True ( ) False ( )

ANSWERS: 1. True, says the Outdoor Power Equipment Institute. Wet grass can cause you to slip and lose control. Also, avoid using a plug-in electric mower in the rain or on wet grass.
2. False. Without the spark plug disconnected, the blade can be started up again if turned by hand. Disconnect the spark plug, or better yet, remove it before touching the blade.
3. True. Hills and slopes should always be cut sideways with a walk-behind mower to avoid slipping and possibly pulling the power mower over you.
4. False. Always make sure your lawn is clear of debris regardless of the type of power mower used. Sticks, stones, wire and other debris could be thrown by the blade.

A foundation and a continuation of the Yoe spirit will make for another successful season for the upcoming school year.

The Herald sport staff will be interviewing area schools for information concerning the upcoming football season. The staff has planned a study of the complete athletic programs of each school.

The Town and Country Tennis Association will be finishing the first tennis tourney this Sunday and the Herald will publish results in Thursday's edition.

Conference Annouces Player/Coach of Year

Texas Junior College Athletic Conference announced Thursday their pick for Player and Coach of the Year, and Temple Junior College placed Glenn Wendt and Coach Charle Lodes to those positions.

Wendt is a sophomore from Lone Grove, Okla. who was also named Player of the Year for region XIV and was one of the top two District VI players.

Three other TJC players were named to the All-District VI squad and will be nominated to the NJCAA All-American team. These are: Chris Keis, pitcher; Steve Deskin, third baseman; and Gary Thweatt, centerfielder.

The district all-star team was composed of All-Region XIV and V. Players incudded: Greg Kruciak, pitcher; and also included Wendt, Keis, Deskin, and Thweatt.

The TJC Leapords dominated the baseball diamond compiling a 11-5 mark and advanced to the Region XIV tournament and finished their season with a 38-13 record. TJC ended their '75 season with the Region XIV South Zone title and earned a place in the regional tourney.

"This truck cost us $41,000 in 1973. We'll have to buy two more just like it this year at a cost of $53,000 each."

Trucks and thousands of other kinds of equipment and materials are needed by Texas Power & Light to provide your electric service. The cost of practically every item has risen drastically in the last few years.

But that's only part of the story.

Generating plant fuels cost more. In 1952, the price of natural gas, the principal fuel used by TP&L, was just five cents per 1,000 cubic feet. In 1974, the price was 48 cents per 1,000 cubic feet. The Company's total fuel bill in 1974 was $89 million, more than 64% higher than in 1973.

Construction costs more. To counter the spiraling cost of gas, TP&L is continuing to build new generating plants which will use lignite coal and nuclear materials. Ironically, the cost of lignite-fueled plants is more than twice as much per kilowatt as gas-fueled plants and the cost of nuclear plants is still higher.

Financing costs more. TP&L must borrow money to construct its plants and other facilities. While the interest rates the Company must pay on borrowed money are now somewhat lower than the all-time high of 10⅛% in 1974, they are still about twice the rates of 1964.

Texas Power & Light has always worked to keep the price of electricity as low as possible, consistent with maintaining the reliable service you expect. We will continue this effort in the future, but as our costs increase so must the price you pay for the electricity you use.
